More public benefits vs. state socialism.

That's the top issue of 1950 for both national and state political campaigns, according to battle lines now being formed at Lansing and Washington.

The 1950 special session of the Michigan legislature confirmed the trend on a state-wide basis. Governor G. Mennen Williams struck a note of the liberal crusader when he assailed Republican legislators for "ignoring the needs of the people."

The legislature turned down his proposed $112,000,000 program. Instead government spending was cut approximately $15,000,000.

It is the political thorn of Governor Williams that the Republican party in Michigan is dominated by "special interests," regarding obviously to manufacturers and businessmen. In an address before the Michigan CIO convention in Grand Rapids, Williams assailed the legislature for its "no-nothing record." Because legislators refused to levy a stiff tax on corporation profits, Williams concludes that the G. O. P. is subservient to "Big Business" and hence is committed to more consumer taxes.

This stand of the governor—more public benefits to be financed by business—finds an echo in recent utterances of President Harry Truman. The President wound up a whistle-stop speaking tour, promising to continue his fight for middle income housing, federal aid to education, federal health insurance and an improved farm law.

The cost of all these new public benefits would run into many millions of dollars, all at a time when Federal treasury deficits are mounting. The Republican stand, as expressed by Senator Taft of Ohio, is that the Truman program is straight socialism.

Taft says the Republicans are also intensely in promoting health, security and housing of the

Pulitzer Prize Winner Visits On AuSable

Carl M. Saunders, editor of the Jackson Citizen-Patriot and winner of a Pulitzer Prize this year for his Prayer for Peace, was a visitor for several days at Twin Pine Lodge on the AuSable River, last week.

The Prayer written by Saunders shortly before Memorial Day last year with the thought that Memorial Day which is set aside for the memory of Americans lost in war, should also be a fitting day for prayer that there shall be no more wars.

The poem was used in the Nation's observance of Memorial Day at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington Cemetery and broadcast in a nation-wide radio hookup.

The Prayer For Peace brought a resolution from Congress requesting the President to proclaim Memorial Day a day for each citizen to pray in accordance with his own religious faith for permanent peace.

Following is Editor Saunders Pulitzer prize winning Prayer for Peace:

O Lord, Father of All Men, We come to Thee in humble supplication.

Thou knowest we have strayed much from Thy laws.

Yet, O God, Thou hast blessed us abundantly, and our children, and hopeful in the promise of Thy forgiveness, we now beseech Thy special guidance and care.

Again in this world of mortal men wars and threats of wars beset us.

Jealousies and rivalries of nations plague us.

Fears are all about us.

We turn to Thee, O God, to ask that in Thy good time peace may be restored to all nations of men.

We ask that men may live together in understanding and respect.

We ask that governments may rule in Thy wisdom.

We ask that intolerance, bigotry, and greed as between nations, and men, and races, may be overcome by the force of Thy will.

We ask that this United States and its people may be guided by Thee and that its mothers may be spared the sorrows and its sons the sacrifices of further wars.

Bless our leaders with wisdom. Show us the way to better understanding one with another among our own people.

To that end we seek Thy benediction and light, ready always in faith that Thy will be done and confident that in the end Thy good purpose will triumph. Amen.

Service Medal Authorized For Michigan Guardsmen

The State Military Board this week authorized the award of a new service medal for personnel of the Michigan National Guard as a means of rewarding and recognizing long and honorable service, according to an announcement by the Adjutant General's office.

Initial award of the medal and an accompanying service ribbon will be made to each Guardsman who has served actively and honorably for six years. For each additional three years of service, Guardsmen will be awarded a gilt star to be worn on the ribbon bar. Twenty-five years service will be identified by gilt oak leaf clusters.

Principal feature of the medal is a gold broadsword of a Centurion of the Roman Legion pendant from a ribbon of royal blue. The broadsword is symbolic of the fidelity to trust and the distinguishing mark of those who wore and carried it as a result of long service and military proficiency, according to the board's official description of the new medal.

Applications for the new medal will be submitted to the Adjutant General. Distribution will be initiated as soon as procurement can be made by the Quartermaster General.

The Expert Infantryman's Badge, coveted identification of the true "Doughboy" during World War II, may be worn by personnel of the Michigan National Guard, according to word received by the Adjutant General from Major General Kenneth F. Cramer, National Guard Bureau chief.

Instructions are being issued authorizing the award of the infantry badge to officers and men who can meet the same high requirements prescribed for the regular Army. Qualifying tests for the badge will be conducted during field training under the direction of division commanders. Examining boards will include at least one regular army infantry officer.

Candidates for the expert infantryman rating must meet army

Shall We Turn Back The Clock?

In a recent statement before a House committee the president of a great steel company strongly attacked groups in government which, he said, are seeking to dismember American business. In doing this he went on, "they would turn back clocks to the horse and buggy days of fifty years or more ago, and would try to squeeze a modern, dynamic, efficient America once more into the puny production patterns of industrial childhood."

"Or, by subjecting American productive enterprise to the deadening hand of political regulation, they would borrow from the Old World the dismal philosophies that have led most of Europe to desolation and despair."

In some government circles there seems to be a deluded theory to the effect that business is bad if it is big—and that bigness, per se, is evidence of monopoly. Yet during the years in which the growth of business has been most pronounced—both for whole industries and for companies within them—competition has grown steadily more intense. In the case of this steel company, as an example, it produced 66 per cent of all the steel made in America in 1901. In the ensuing half century its production has grown tremendously—yet now it accounts for only 33 per cent of our steel, due to the expansion of competing steel companies.

During this period of growth our living standards as a people reached new height after new height. Wages rose, working hours dropped, and millions upon millions of average American families bought goods and services that are regarded as the luxuries of the rich in other nations. Business made this possible—free, competitive business both big and small.

The president of the steel company also said that big business and little business are interdependent despite the attempts of "statistically minded theorists" to create economic class distinction. The big business creates opportunities and trade for thousands.

SHORT STORY

Knolton's Case

By Richard Hill Wilkinson

KNOLTON'S ACT was the result of two years of planning. There was little chance that anything would go wrong. He had served as clerk at the lumber camp for two long years. And from the moment he first saw the payroll left unguarded in the office while the bank guard went out and a camp paymaster came in from that moment Knolton knew that some day he'd steal that payroll and make a get-away.

The day that Knolton had chosen for the robbery was not unlike a thousand others. At exactly noon the payroll car drove up. A guard stepped into the office and deposited the heavy bag by Knolton's chair. Knolton greeted him carelessly, nodded at the bag and bent to his work. The guard went out. The moment the door closed Knolton's head came up. He listened intently. Outside, he could hear the bank guard in conversation with Raymond, the camp paymaster. There wasn't a moment to lose.

Quickly Knolton lifted up the cover of his desk, removed from inside a bag almost identical to the one on the floor and equally as heavy. He made the transfer deftly, unhurriedly.

The door opened and Raymond came inside. He nodded briefly to Knolton, picked up the decoy bag and went out again.

Knolton stepped outside and walked leisurely toward the river. Unobserved he climbed into the canoe which was hidden there, and pushed off.

By mid-afternoon Knolton reached a tributary and turned off the main stream. He paddled up this smaller waterway for more than a mile.

He set the canoe adrift and headed inland, swinging southward. By dusk he had come to a virgin stand of timber, mighty monarchs of the forest as yet unscathed by the lumberman's axe. His steps led him to a huge pine, larger than the rest, with thick undergrowth at the base. He parted the growth, pulled at a tuft of dirt. The tuft came away, revealing a shallow hole. Knolton had dug the hole months before, allowed the undergrowth to grow over it so that no trace of his recent visit would be in evidence.

He deposited the bag in the hole and carefully replaced the dirt.

IT WAS A MONTH before Knolton reached his destination; a tiny village hundreds of miles south of the lumber camp. Here he paused to rest with a friend. By now he had grown a beard. The friend provided dry, and Knolton changed

By now he had grown a beard. the color of his hair from light brown to black.

Six months later Knolton, now known as Carl Hedman, with no trace of the one-time clerk showing beneath his perfect disguise, rode leisurely back toward the scene of his crime.

The lumbermen gave him no more than a passing glance.

Satisfied that he had not been recognized, Knolton followed the river to the mouth of the tributary.

With pounding heart he mounted the ridge and paused to look. It was as if a hand had suddenly reached out and was squeezing him by a powerful grip. He stood rooted, mouth ajar, staring in stupefied incredulity at the country below. With a sense of horror he realized what had happened. The entire area had been logged by the lumber company, swept bare of every standing tree and piece of timber.

Every tree stump looked alike; none was larger or different from its neighbor. He surmounted great piles of slash, tearing at them frantically, hunting for the stump, the stump of the great pine tree.

Thus unmindful of his direction he came again to the river bank. And when at length he reached the top of another hill he paused to rest, overcome by fatigue. Too late he felt the slash pile beneath him slipping away. Too late he realized that the slash had been thrown on the brink of a precipice overhanging the river.

Knolton, with a pitiful cry on his lips, went over the brink. Far, far below he lay, a broken human body on the jagged rocks.

TALL TIMBER TALES
BY PETE

In summing up the Timberlooker's story of the clash between the various Logging interests of a generation ago, and comparing conditions then with now, and the type of man who lived back there, the thought that those were "The God Old Days," or that their was "The Simple Life," should be forever banished. These men were building America. And America was building them. Of course there was dead wood, even poisonous growths to be trimmed out. The settlement on the AuSable was in the American tradition. Free men, generous to a fault but terrible when aroused. Now their logs had been burned and their beloved leader, Bonnie Parker had been killed. It was dead of night in Big Bear Swamp and the Timberlooker was down with a slug from an assassin's gun in his shoulder and their prisoner had been successfully liberated. The squaw was tearing strips from her buckskin skirt to bind Clay's wound and the two men from the settlement, the half-breed Indian, the old one-legged trapper and the ten year old boy had fanned out through the brush, searching through the inky-blackness for the trail of the enemy.

An hour passed, two hours. Clay ground his teeth and cursed under his breath, his arm bound to his side by the buckskin thongs. Finally it was morning, and it had been a long night. The squaw had kept the first burning low against the hundreds of wolves that prowled the swamp, but how about the others? Clay might have known, they were made of the stuff that made America great. The morning was less than an hour old when they returned, and they had four prisoners now, instead of one. Willie and Charlie Jenks an dthe ir father. George Jenks, and Zeke Thorne, the high and mighty men of the Struthers Lumber Company. Their eyes were hot and glowering, their hands tied behind their backs with leather belts and buckskins boot laces. They had made the mistake of traveling only a mile or two through the timber, then pausing to build a fire and wait for daylight.

The old trapper bent over Clay and placed a rough hand on his forehead and grinned down into his face as he counted his pulse rate.

"Sorry to leave you so long, son," he said, "but you're all right. I stopped at my shack and picked up my old surgeons kit. I guess you and me had better have a little rattle." As Clay lay stretched out on packing cases from the wagon and the old trapper probed for the bullet in his shoulder, he tried to remember some of the legends about this famous patriot of Big Bear Swamp. One had it that he'd been a famous surgeon somewhere in the east, but he'd been forced to operate on his own wife and she died. Then he'd left civilization and took up life among the Michigan Indians. As the old man worked he told Clay how he got caught in a bear trap and lost his leg. He'd lain there so long he knew his leg couldn't be saved so he hired an Indian to cut it off, using his bootlaces as a tourniquet. "I had to cuss him plenty to keep him going," the old trapper said. "I never saw a man sweat so in all my life, but he finally got it off."

"Gee" Clay said, "it must of been pretty tough."

"The leg?" old Easy laughed, "well either that, or the knife was dull. Here's a nice little .38 bullet for you to keep as a souvenir. I guess we better begin thinkin' about breakfast now. we got a day's work ahead."

Warns About Brake Condition of Car

"For want of a nail the shoe was lost; for want of a shoe the horse was lost; for want of a horse, the rider was lost."

Ben Franklin's shrewd observation on the cost of neglect was cited by the Michigan State Safety Commission in pointing up its May program of traffic accident prevention.

"Neglect, in this day and age," Sheriff Wm. F. Golinick, said, "can have far more sinister implications than Franklin ever imagined. Neglecting the maintenance of your car—as we all know—can put it out of commission at a time when we need it most. Sometimes though, it is even worse when your car continues to run in such a condition. This makes driving like sitting on a smouldering powder keg."

According to Sheriff Wm. F. Golinick, there are still a fair number of motorists who have not figured this out because in spite of the fact that the department has been checking brakes on violator's cars for three weeks cars are still being found with dangerously unsafe brakes. (Of the 67 cars checked thus far 31 were found to have bad brakes.)

Pointing out that periodic inspections are a purely individual responsibility the State Safety Commission has joined with the National Safety Council this month in reminding drivers that: "Your car is as safe as YOU make it!"

Republican legislators point out that appropriations for the new fiscal year start July 1, 1950, and that the legislature will return to Lansing in January, 1951, for the regular session. Legislators insist that no one is going to suffer and that appropriations are adequate to meet normal needs.
The will of the Republican legislators to put a halt to the even-higher trend of government spending was re-inforced May 18 when Auditor General Muri K. Aten compiled a 10-year table of comparative government spending in Michigan.
Education costs for example, soared from $55.8 millions in 1939 to $169.7 millions in 1949; health, $7.7 to $12.5 millions; mental $13.7 to $32.5 millions; welfare, $44.9 to $94.2 millions; highways, $54.3 to $108.9 millions. These figures include grants of federal and state aid. Today 78 per cent of state sales tax revenues are now returned to local units—cities, counties, schools, townships.
President Truman and Governor Williams are confident that the people want more public benefits. The Republicans are equally confident that the people do not want "state socialism." Every dollar of additional government spending must inevitably be paid by the consumer in the form of higher prices, they say.
And so 1950 political battle

Science and Nature Work Together To Make Rubber

Bud-grafting a young rubber tree in Southeast Asia to produce a higher yield.

Modern civilization has been nourished on the milk of the rubber tree. From baby nipples to giant truck tires, from girdles to garden hose, life today depends on rubber.

Over 90% of all the rubber that is grown comes from Southeast Asia where millions of people make their living by planting, cultivating and tapping the billions of acres of rubber trees.

Not satisfied with Nature's product, researchers are constantly at work to improve it. At the Rubber Research Institute of Malaya, high-yielding strains are developed and bud-grafted to rubber trees, insecticides and fungicides are developed to keep trees healthy, and the quality of the rubber itself is continually tested in laboratories.

Today natural rubber is used in thousands of products that serve mankind, and many new uses are being discovered every year.

For a free booklet showing how rubber is grown in Southeast Asia, entitled "Natural Rubber and You," write to the Natural Rubber Bureau, Dept. N500, 1631 K St., N.W., Washington 6, D.C.
